Areas of good practice

Standard 1.1

- The pharmacy works closely with the relevant regulatory agencies when it identifies duplicated product barcodes or similar issues. This has led to national alerts being distributed to other pharmacies, and those risks being addressed by the manufacturers involved.

Standard 1.2

- The pharmacy makes sure that a programme of manual checks are carried out at the receiving pharmacies to verify the accuracy of their automated dispensing systems. The pharmacy's team members are also regularly observed in their roles to ensure that its processes are being followed correctly and accurately.

Standard 2.2

- The pharmacy makes sure all its team members are appropriately trained for their roles with its own bespoke operative training programme. The pharmacy has designed the training to meet its specific needs.

Standard 4.2

- The pharmacy has effective systems in place to identify items which may not be suitable for dispensing by them. It immediately highlights the item(s), returns them to the originating pharmacy and automatically orders it for them. The automated system also quarantines products which require additional intervention by the pharmacist, using a colour coded system to highlight them. This makes it easy for the pharmacists to see the reasons for the quarantine and deal with them appropriately.
